

EU Urban Agenda: Roadmap from Riga to Amsterdam

The declaration of Riga is an important building block towards the establishment of an EU Urban Agenda. For the first time, EU-ministers responsible for Urban Development will commit to developing an EU Urban Agenda, in partnership with cities, the European Commission and other stakeholders. The declaration of Riga identifies some key principles for the design of the Urban Agenda.

The objective of the Dutch Presidency is that the responsible Ministers adopt in May 2016 a declaration (the "Amsterdam declaration") establishing the EU Urban Agenda, its priorities and working methods. For this to happen, important elements have to be developed and some concrete actions need to be taken between now and the informal Ministerial meeting of May 30th, 2016.

This roadmap describes those elements and actions.

1. Key elements

The Amsterdam declaration will be a concise document defining the key elements of the EU Urban Agenda. In particular, the document will provide:

- An updated, shared understanding of urban development (Urban Acquis) based on key EU documents, such as informal ministerial conclusions, the Territorial Agenda of the EU 2020, and the Cities of Tomorrow report. To facilitate the discussion, the Netherlands has commissioned EUKN to prepare a "State of Play" document outlining the conceptual framework.
- The priorities areas on which to focus cooperation. The Commission has identified three broad priority areas. Their broad formulation gives the Member States and other key stakeholders room to specify more precisely the concrete issues where they would like work to focus on. This should result in a rolling agenda allowing new priority areas to be addressed as need arises.
- A working method defining what to do, the role of the key actors and the governance of the process, including monitoring of results. Sustainable urban development requires partnerships between public and private actors and engaging citizens, within and beyond the boundaries of cities. This is necessary to bridge the gap between the different logics of sectoral policies and of urban and territorial policies, by enabling the development of multi-sectoral interventions adapted to the specific place-based potentials and problems. Informal partnerships between the Commissions and other EU institutions, the Member States, European organisations, cities and urban stakeholders should be built in the selected priority areas.

The UDG and DG meetings during the Luxembourgish and Dutch presidencies will be the key platforms to build consensus on the abovementioned elements.
